The MyCreativity conference, organized in November 2006 by the Institute of Network Culture, brought together scholars from around the world who are doing critical research into 'creative industries'. The event generated so much interesting material that Ned Rossiter and I, who put together the program, decided to bring out a reader. We sent out a call and approached authors. The project got delayed because of the huge task to copy edit essay of non-native English speakers. Finally we found Michael Dieter in Melbourne who did a marvelous job. You can order the reader, for free, by sending an email to Marije van Eck (marijevaneck at networkcultures.org).

You can read the introduction to the MyCreativity reader also here in my pages. A pdf of the entire reader will be available soon on the INC website.